

FRANCIS APPEALS OF MRS. CHADWICK PROVE FRUITLESS

Department of Justice
Turns Deaf Ear to the Ohio Bank Wrecker.

Uncle Sam is turning a deaf ear to the frantic appeals of Cassie Chadwick, the noted adventuress, now serving out a ten years' sentence in the Columbus, Ohio, penitentiary. It has been decided that she is not entitled to parole, this being her second imprisonment, and she will not be transferred to a Federal prison.

The Department of Justice could not order her transfer to a Federal prison if it so desired because those buildings have no wings for women prisoners. Although the woman has fairly driven the Ohio warden to distraction by her complaints and appeals, it is not at all likely that she will even be transferred to another State prison.

It is understood that the next storm center of the Chadwick disturbance will be Oyster Bay. Her only hope of being released from prison before November 26, 1911, rests in President Roosevelt. It is not believed the least consideration would be given to an application for commutation or pardon.

THE FIRST STEAMBOAT.

The first successful steamboat was built by a man who kept his eyes on Rumsey and Pritch and Symington, and made the best of what he saw. As all the world knows, this was Robert Fulton. In August of 1807, Fulton's steamboat, the Clermont, made a trip on the Hudson river from New York to Albany, a distance of 150 miles, in thirty-two hours, and returned in thirty hours. Fulton advertised for passengers, and his boat was soon crowded. "The Clermont," says an English writer, "was the steamboat that commenced and continued to run for practical purposes, and for the remuneration of her owners." Here was the boat that was wanted—one that was financially profitable.—From S. E. Forman's "Stories of Useful Inventions" in August St. Nicholas.

THE WISDOM OF THE BEE.

We marvel at what we call the wisdom of the hive bee, yet there is one thing she never learns from experience, and that is, that she is storing up honey for the use of man. She could not learn this, because such knowledge is not necessary to her own well-being. Neither does she ever know when she has had enough to carry her through the winter. This knowledge, again, is not important. Gather and store honey as long as there is any to be had is her motto, and in that rule she is safe.—John Burroughs, in the August Atlantic.

FLEET DESTINY PUZZLES OFFICIALS

Department Still Orders Have Been Issued.

Officials of the Navy Department and naval officers in general are sitting up and taking notice over reports coming from Oyster Bay quoting William Loeb, Jr., as announcing positively that the Atlantic fleet will be sent to the Pacific by order of the President. This statement is not quite so interesting to the officials here, however, since many of them who are in closest touch have been convinced all along of the policy to send the fleet to the West.

Inquiries made at the Navy Department elicited no definite information, whatever, the statements being repeated that no orders having any bearing, whatever, upon the transfer of the big fleet to the West coast have yet been issued. In the absence of Assistant Secretary Newberry, who left last night to spend the week-end with his family at Watch Hill, R. I., and Rear Admiral Brownson, chief of the Bureau of Navigation, Rear Admiral Mason, chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, was Acting Secretary. It was stated that there was absolutely nothing new concerning the situation of the proposed fleet movement.

The statement attributed to Secretary Loeb that "no orders have been issued by the general board," and again, "no orders have been issued by the naval board," has led some of the officials to doubt the authenticity of the statement, as Secretary Loeb is fully aware that the general board issues no orders at all, is only advisory, there is no naval board, and orders for the movement of the fleet must come first from the President, and then from the Secretary of the Navy.

HE WAS NOT PADDED.

I recall one incident that had a tragic side: We were playing "Rosedale," and the thin gentleman who had been playing the role of Bunbury had become ill and a portly substitute had been secured. The character is that of a corpulent gentleman and the slender individual who had before taken the part had been forced to pad himself in order to fulfill the physical requirements of the part. At one moment of the play I had been accustomed as a comedy feature, to jab a hatpin into his padded chest. The fat gentleman, of course, found it unnecessary to pad himself, and this fact I entirely overlooked when it came my turn to wield the hatpin. Needless to say, she never knew when she had enough to carry her through the winter. This knowledge, again, is not important. Gather and store honey as long as there is any to be had is her motto, and in that rule she is safe.—John Burroughs, in the August Atlantic.

Prison Doors Open For Mrs. Bradley

the strength she must have for the fearful ordeal of her trial. Now, she must convalesce in jail, amid surroundings of sickening strong men.

"It is hard," she said, "very hard." And there was misery, unexpressed in her voice.

Smiles Courageously.

"I am an optimist," she declared bravely, and the smile born of her courage lit her emaciated face. "I must be an optimist. To bear the things that are pressing me, to live for the duties that I have and to be fit for those duties, I must be an optimist."

The reference was to the two little boys in Salt Lake City, the children whose father, she says, was Senator Brown.

"That awful trial," she resumed, "is what tortures me day and night. Nothing worse could ever possibly come to any woman. I shudder when I think of it. I hate it. I am sorry you came to see me, because I do hate all this notoriety so."

Her head fell forward, and from her eyes, schooled to weep, there fell a tear. She is a refined woman, unusually well educated and informed on the topics of the day. Her well cared for hands, the simplicity of her white dress, the daintiness with which she ate the food that was set before her by the silent-frothed nurse during the interview, her gracious smile of thanks to the nurse—all these things told of her culture and gentle breeding. She was a woman, friendless and forlorn, one who, in the blind, unreasoning pursuit of ineffable happiness, had found before the path was half traced, misery and degradation. In the harsh grasp of the law, far from her home, she welcomed sympathy and words of encouragement.

Johnson Saved Her Life.

"Of my treatment at the jail," she said, always with that smile of bravery, "I have nothing to say but good. Captain Harris is one of the finest men in the world, and my treatment has been all that anybody could ever hope for in a jail. Of my stay here, I have nothing to say but gratitude. To Dr. Johnson I am profoundly grateful, as I am to the physicians in the hospital. I think Dr. Johnson saved my life. I was on the verge of a physical and nervous collapse.

"I had so hoped to get out of jail on bond, but I have to give that up now. You see, I'm far from home. Why, it takes ten days to send a letter to my home and get an answer to it. Just think of how very, very far that is! And, of course, I have no friends in Washington, except one or two who have been kind to me.

"I would stay in the hospital much longer, for I am very weak, but I can't afford it. You see, I have no money—no money. Money is such an important thing for people who are oppressed and in trouble. I wish I had it. I would like so much to get well."

Living on Memories.

She looked about the walls of the sun parlor, down the cool, pleasant corridor and out to the trees whose leaves nearly waved into the open window beside which she sat. There was in her glance the light of memories. She impresses one as a woman who lives on memories—as one who hoards for an hour her memories, to have them embittered the next minute by regrets. She is no ordinary woman nor is she an ordinary offender.

For years she and the man she slew walked in the woods. They believed to be paradise. She has scaled the heights of happiness. She has dreamed dreams and seen visions. When the light faded she was distraught. She followed the man across the continent and killed him here. Her defense will be insanity. Her lawyers will tell the jury that she did not know what she did when she killed Brown.

"Did you see me that—that night?" she asked the reporter.

"Yes."

"I wonder what I did and said that night," she mused. "I can't remember. I'm afraid I was beside myself."

Makes Herself See Hope.

"Ah, how have I stood all that I have brought on myself!" Her sigh was the definition of pain. "I'm always optimistic. I make myself see hope when, perhaps, there is very little hope. That is how I endure, I suppose. Without being optimistic, I couldn't live. Some nights I can't sleep at all. If I can't sleep, I make myself rest at least. I do try, oh, so hard, to get all the good out of things that I can."

She was silent for a moment, her gaze on the fleecy clouds in the far sky.

"It would be nice," she said, "if somebody, hearing of my plight, would put up my bail for me—some great philanthropist. But that's an idle fancy. In a day or two I'll have to go back to the bolts and the bars of the jail—for two long months. And then the trial will come! That is the worst of all. I don't see, I can't see how I will stand that fearful time."

Tidings From Her Children?

She paused as a colored messenger entered the parlor, a letter in his hand. "The warden presents his compliments and sends you this letter that came for you," said the messenger.

"Thank you, Frank," she smiled. "Present my compliments to the warden and thank him. I'm afraid I'll be back with you before long, Frank."

"I hope not, Mrs. Bradley," said the negro.

"That's the warden's carriage driver," she explained after he had gone. Then she fingered the envelope with her fingers, that trembled always. The envelope bore the postmark of a distant town. Perhaps it brought her tidings of her children on the slopes of the Rocky mountains. She was all eagerness to read the letter.

When the reporter arose to leave, he asked her if her optimism would last. "It must," she said, and her chin went up with determination. "I must be hopeful in order to live. If I can still hope when I cannot be liberated even after the judge agreed to admit me to bail, I am capable of great optimism, a little longer anyway."

She tore open the envelope, turning away from the meal she had scarcely touched. And about her mouth there was an expression of tenderness so intense, so pathetic, as to defy the power of words.

HUMOR OF THE DIPLOMATS.

Occasionally, but not often, the love of fun leads some one away from courtesy, as when a prominent young fellow in-troduced to a former Chinese minister in the colored man whose duty it was to serve a preparatory cocktail, upstairs, to the dinner guests. "Mr. Minister," said the joker, "allow me to present Mr. ————, our own representative at Lijl and Zanzibar." The diplomat took the presentation in good faith, and grasped the true situation only when the newly created minister, with a broad grin, asked whether it should be a Manhattan or a whiskey and soda. But this Oriental was famous for his own wit and usually came out about even. To a young debutante, who mischievously asked him if it were really true that he had five wives, he gracefully responded that the advantages of such a custom occurred to him only when he arrived in the United States. But, as was usually the case with him, there was a serpent's tooth behind even this soft answer.—From "The Younger Set at Washington," by Aubrey Langston in the August Bohemian.

A PALATABLE RECIPE.

A dish that cannot fail to delight the palate of those who love highly seasoned viands, and yet, strangely enough, will not induce an increase of the body's internal heat, is recommended by Harry Leighton, whose talents as an amateur cook are quite on a par with his ability as an actor. This is a Mexican concoction, called "Chili Colorado," and those who care for such dainties will find it a most delectable mixture. To make it, Mr. Leighton takes a quart of boiled tomatoes and one onion that has already been chopped fine. To these he adds three tablespoonsful of granulated sugar, one tablespoonful of the prepared ground Spanish pepper—a condiment that may be purchased at any first-class grocery store—and a little salt. The mixture is then permitted to stew rather slowly for some twenty or thirty minutes, when, if it seems too dry, a little water is added.—From the August Bohemian.

NO ONE TO KEEP HIM.

Lucy Snow—Bill Jackson don't seem able to get a libin' now.

Sam Johnson—No, an' he sho' hab' tried hard enuf.

Lucy Snow—Go 'long, man! Why, he ain't got no gumption now.

Sam Johnson—O! he got de gumption, all right; but he's too hony. No gal will marry him.—Philadelphia Press.

THIEVES GET LOOT IN REAL MONEY

Servant Suspect on One Crime—No Clue to Other.

Complaint was made to the detectives last night of money thefts from two residences. In one case suspicion is said to point to a servant while in the other the detectives are without a clue.

Ernest Poindexter, living at Forty-seventh place and the New Cut road, reported that $60, in $5 and $10 bills, was stolen from him yesterday. Miss Frieda Wenn, living at the same address, says two $5 bills were taken from her pocketbook.

Miss Alice E. Key, of 312 Indiana avenue northwest, attributes her loss of $17.75 to a dishonest servant. She informed the police that the servant, about thirty years old and very black, went to work at the house on Friday and disappeared yesterday morning. When it was discovered that she had gone Miss Key looked for her money. She immediately communicated with the police.

Henry Briney, of 23 N street northwest, asked the police to look out for the person who stole his silver watch. He says it was in a coat at his home when taken.

INCREASE OF MENTAL MALADIES.

Through advances in surgical and medical science, more and more diseases are found to be preventable, while more and more of those which used to be thought incurable are shown to be capable of treatment, so that the average of health rises with that of the duration of life. On the other hand, however, is serious enough to be specially mentioned. Lunacy is increasing in all countries which keep a statistical record of mental maladies, and the increase is too large to be explained merely by the fact that records are now more accurate. Unless this fact can be accounted for by the abuse of intoxicants, an abuse which seems to be rather decreasing than increasing, it is ominous because it seems to imply that there are factors in modern life which tend to breed disorders in the brain. But we have not sufficient data for positive conclusions.—Hon. James Bryce, in the August Atlantic.

DEATH OF THE LAWYER.

Phoney—Say, Butt, when I die I hopes it'll be like a lawyer I once heard of: Butt—How's dat?

Phoney—Dis lawyer died pleadin' at the bar an' dey carried him out on a beer!—From the August Bohemian.

GIRL'S PREACHING WAKES YORKSHIRE

Twelve-Year-Old Child
Converted Four Hundred.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—A twelve-year-old girl is creating the biggest sensation Yorkshire has experienced in years. She is a child preacher, Frances Bradley Storr. In three months it is claimed she has made 400 converts and electrified the whole district with her preaching.

The girl is the child of a Doncaster police court missionary. Out of the pulpit she is shy and modest, but within the chance becomes a changed being, preaching with great power, although without emotional effort.

It was less than a year ago that Frances showed her power. She had been accustomed to accompany her mother and other members of the family. One day when her mother was spending the day with friends, to the surprise of every one she began to preach.

Her hearers were dumfounded at her address. Since then she has been preaching steadily.
